Apoptosis is an evolutionarily conserved 'suicide' programme present in all metazoan cells. Despite its highly conserved nature, it is only recently that any of the molecular mechanisms underlying ...

Apoptosis is a highly conserved mechanism by which eucaryotic cells commit suicide. It enables an organism to eliminate unwanted and defective cells through an orderly process of cellular disintegration that has the advantage of not inducing an undesirable inflammatory response [1]. Apoptotic

Induction of Apoptosis and Cell-Cycle Arrest in Human

Apoptosis is a type of programmed cell death in which molecules signal for the initiation and execution of cell death in response to certain regulatory or stress-induced signals. The regulation of apoptosis is critical to the proper development and function of organisms.

The proliferation rate of a cell population reflects a balance between cell division, cell cycle arrest, differentiation and apoptosis. The regulation of these processes is central to development and tissue homeostasis, whereas dysregulation may lead to overt pathological outcomes, notably cancer

Apoptosis and Disease. Apoptosis, in general, confers advantages during an organism's life cycle. Between 50 billion and 70 billion cells die each day due to apoptosis in the average human adult.

Introduction to DNA Cell Cycle Analysis

The DNA cell cycle analysis showed that in A431 cells, epigallocatechin-3-gallate treatment resulted in arrest in the G₀ to G₁ phase of the cell cycle and a dose-dependent apoptosis. Conclusions: Green tea may protect against cancer by causing cell cycle arrest and inducing apoptosis.

Defects in the cell cycle are thought to be responsible for the resistance to chemotherapy or radiation by certain tumor cells, so a virus that can induce apoptosis despite defects in the cell cycle is useful for cancer treatment.
